Empathy Through Technology

The 20 Years of WebServes

Only 30% of nonprofits survive past their 10th year, according to the National Center on Charitable Statistics. The usual suspects for their demise? Vision, budget, talent, time and technology—the "basics" in business operation. Who would have thought that WebServes, given the inauspicious events that birthed the motive for its founding, would reach 20 years?

When our founder, James Bradley, first responded to the post-9/11 impacts on family, neighbors, local grassroots groups and small businesses, it was not to create a nonprofit tech startup. It was a marshaled effort to address the needs of local entities threatened by the redirection of funding and support from city, state and federal agencies.

Bradley, along with pioneer volunteer Amy Hsieh, drew on their experiences and skills to meet the immense pressing needs of their communities. It required three years of shaping and trial efforts to produce the nonprofit and launch its mission in service of those sectors most challenged. After two decades, we are still here!
